MARKETS RECAP

Last Week: 4th of September 2017, to 8th of September 2017

The U.S. dollar saw another week with losses as economic and geo-political risks continued to weigh on the greenback. The threat of North Korea's missile tests saw the markets bidding up safe haven assets. Investors were also concerned about the U.S. debt ceiling which eventually managed to be postponed to December. Meanwhile, the hurricanes that have hit the U.S. shores also added their bit in keeping the U.S. dollar subdued through the week.

RBA keeps interest rates unchanged at 1.5%

The Reserve Bank of Australia opted to keep the cash rate unchanged at record lows of 1.5% at its meeting last week. This marked a twelfth consecutive policy meeting where the central bank has left interest rates steady. The last rate cut took place in 2016 when the RBA lowered the cash rate by 25 basis points.

Last week's decision to hold the interest rates steady was widely expected. In the monetary policy statement, the RBA said that it remained optimistic on the economy and expects that the current low interest rate period will help the economy to recover. The RBA said that it expects the domestic economy to pick up in the coming year.

This was optimistic in comparison to the previous statement where the RBA was less optimistic and cited concerns in the residential construction. The central bank also said that it expects wage growth to rise and was more optimistic on the labor markets. Speaking on wage growth, the RBA's governor Philip Lowe said that wage growth "is likely to continue for a while yet, although stronger conditions in the labour market should see some lift in wages growth over time."

Later in the week, the Australian quarterly GDP numbers were released. According to official data, the Australian economy expanded at a pace of 0.8% in the second quarter ending June. On a year over year basis, the Australian GDP expanded 1.8%, in line with the median forecasts and slightly higher from 1.7% in the first quarter.

Final consumption expenditure added 0.8% on the quarter and 2.6% on the year as fixed capital income rose 1.5% on the quarter to post 1.8% increase on the year.

Bank of Canada hikes rates sooner than expected

The Bank of Canada met for its monthly monetary policy meeting last week. At the meeting, the BoC hiked interest rates by 25 basis points to 0.75%, marking a second consecutive monthly increase in interest rates.

"Recent economic data have been stronger than expected, supporting the bank's view that growth in Canada is becoming more broadly-based and self-sustaining," the bank said in its statement. Just last week, the Canadian economy was seen expanding and posted the strongest growth numbers in the first half of the year. Canadian GDP rose to the highest levels since 2002, which was also referenced by the BoC as it said, "The level of GDP is now higher than the bank had expected."

The central bank however managed expectations of further rate hikes as it said that monetary policy decisions were not pre-determined but that decisions could be influenced by incoming economic data. The markets had previously expected the BoC to hike at the meeting in October.

However, following last week's meeting, the expectations still remain that another rate hike could be expected by end of this year.

ECB postpones tapering decision to October

The much anticipated monetary policy meeting from the European central bank last week saw the ECB postponing the decision to taper QE to the October monetary policy meeting. However, the ECB was seen giving ample clues that it would proceed with policy tightening in the near term.

The ECB also gave its fresh projections as it expected growth to expand slightly faster than previously estimated. However, long term inflation forecasts were revised lower. The ECB President Mario Draghi also touched upon the exchange rate of the euro calling it one of the risks. However, the markets ignored his comments for lack of conviction and bid the euro higher.

The ECB is expected to cut back its QE purchases by another 20 billion euro starting January after the current QE purchases runs its course. The central bank is expected to announce further measures when it meets in October.

MARKETS PREVIEW

11th of September 2017, to 15th of September 2017

Central bank meetings continue into another week. The baton passes over to the Swiss National Bank and the Bank of England. No policy changes are expected from either of the central banks this week. On the economic front, data from the U.S. will include inflation figures while a busy week from the UK will see inflation and jobs report coming out during the week ahead of Thursday's BoE meeting. Elsewhere, in the Eurozone, economic data takes a back seat with only second tier data coming out.

Focus on UK: Inflation, jobs and the BoE

The British pound managed to rally to 1.32 against the U.S. dollar last week. The gains came despite a weak set of numbers which the pound sterling ignored. The week ahead will signal some important economic releases. Start the week, the UK's monthly inflation numbers will be coming out. According to the economists polled, consumer prices in the UK are expected to rise 2.8%, accelerating from 2.6% previously. This could potentially bring forth pressure on the Bank of England as last month inflation failed to pick up.

Later in the week, the monthly jobs report is expected to show the UK's unemployment rate steady at 4.4%. The unemployment rate fell in July surprisingly. Wage growth will once again come into focus, especially if inflation figures come out stronger from the previous month. The UK's average earnings are expected to rise 2.3% on a year over year basis in August. This is higher than 2.1% increase seen in the previous month. A stronger wage growth data could potentially increase confidence in the UK's labor market.

Following the inflation and jobs report, on Thursday the Bank of England will be holding its monetary policy review. No major changes are expected from the BoE. The UK's main interest rates are expected to remain steady at 0.25% while the asset purchase program is also not expected to be changes. Investors will be looking for any hawkish forward guidance from the BoE officials.

U.S. retail sales and monthly inflation data

From the U.S. traders will be focusing on the monthly retail sales and inflation figures next week. Following a slow start to the trading week, economic data picks up speed from Thursday onwards when the CPI numbers will be coming out. According to median estimates, inflation in the U.S. is forecast to have increased 0.3% on the month in August, accelerating from 0.1% in July.

Core inflation rate is also expected to rise by a modest 0.2% from 0.1% previously. Later in the week, the monthly retail sales figures is forecast to show a slowdown as headline retail sales is expected to rise just 0.1%, after increasing 0.6% previously. Core retail sales figures are however expected to rise at a steady pace of 0.5%, same as the previous month.

TECHNICAL CORNER

Gold prices have continued the strong surge to the upside. After initially breaking past the $1300.00 an ounce level, gold prices were seen rising towards $1350.00. On Friday, the bearish price action in the precious metal suggested a possible loss of this bullish momentum. As a result, we can expect a near term decline. Still, this dip in the rally could potentially offer further buying opportunity. Most of the gains in the precious metal came on the back of the uncertainty from the geo-political issues. The continued threats from North Korea has pushed investors to bid up the prices of gold.

XAUUSD (1346.23) – Daily Chart

From a technical stand point, Friday's price action which was a bearish close suggests that traders could be looking to book profit at the current levels. A near term correction in gold prices could be on the cards. In this scenario, gold prices could be seen pushing lower to retest the recently breached support level of 1300 - 1291. A retest of this support level which previously acted as resistance shows further upside to come.

In the near term, minor support has been formed at 1334. A break down below this minor support will indicate the near term decline to 1300.00. Longer term investors could be looking to enter on to the long side near the 1300.00 support level.
